Biographical Note:
University of Illinois at Chicago faculty member Peter P. Klassen (1905-1977) was a specialist in demography and one of the country’s foremost social science analysts. His work influenced the decision to establish a four-year University of Illinois Chicago campus and he was instrumental in developing the Criminal Justice program at the University’s Chicago Circle Campus. Born in Simferopol, Crimea, Klassen and his family moved to Canada in 1925. Klassen worked in a furniture factory in Canada before coming to the United States to study at Denison University in Ohio, where he received his B.A. in 1931. Klassen did graduate studies at the University of Chicago, working with William Fielding Ogburn, who inspired his interest in demography. He received his MA in 1938 and later returned to obtain his PhD. with a major in demographic studies in 1949.

As Senior Social Science Analyst for the U.S. State Department (1943-1944) and Chief Area Social Science Analyst in the Office of Strategic Services (1944-1947) during WWII, Klassen prepared demographic analyses and public content analyses. He taught at the College of the Ozarks (1938-1939), Pennsylvania State University (1939-1941), and the University of Florida (1947-1948) before joining the faculty of the Chicago Navy Pier campus of the University of Illinois in 1948. Klassen became the senior sociologist in the Division of Social Sciences for the undergraduate division. He typically taught nine hours a semester and was especially fond of introductory classes, in which the opportunity to shape young minds was greatest. Klassen was later remembered as a witty lecturer whose presentations were enhanced by humor and by anecdotes and examples from his travels. Beginning in 1954, Klassen also lectured each summer at the School of Financial Public Relations at Northwestern University.

In the 1950s and 1960s, Klassen began extensive demographic research for the University of Illinois’ Executive Vice President, the Office of the Provost, the State of Illinois
Higher Education Commission, and various legislative commissions. As a demographic consultant to the Randolph Commission, his studies helped establish a rationale for developing a four-year Chicago campus of the University of Illinois. Klassen’s work was also influential in shaping the 1963 Illinois Board of Higher Education master plan for the development of the state’s colleges and universities.

When the new University of Illinois Chicago Circle campus opened in 1965, Klassen became the head of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology. In 1966, the departments separated. Klassen returned to teaching and in 1967 he was appointed Director of the newly established Office of Demographic Studies. The department was an outgrowth of Klassen’s earlier demographic studies and was designed to meet the continuing need for follow-up and new studies. The Office of Demographic Studies was administratively located in the Office of the Chancellor but also closely allied with the program in demographic studies in the department of sociology. It also provided services to local and state agencies and conducted several all-university surveys. At the end of June 1972, the Office of Demographic Studies was phased out.

In 1961, Superintendent of Police Orlando W. Wilson approached University of Illinois Chancellor Norman A. Parker with a request to establish a Criminal Justice program at the university. Parker appointed a committee composed of Klassen, Dean Robert E. Corley, Dr. A.D. Pickett and Dr. Milton L. Rakove. Klassen became Chair of the committee. The Academic Advisory Committee to the Administration of Criminal Justice Curriculum was charged with defining goals for a program to introduce students to law enforcement and with offering guidance on academic issues to the Director of the program. In April 1965, the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences announced that the Illinois State Board of Higher Education had approved a Bachelor of Arts degree in the Administration of Criminal Justice. The program was the first, and at that time the only, baccalaureate degree program in police sciences in the State of Illinois.

In June 1967, Attorney General Ramsey Clark approved a grant submitted by Klassen to the Department of Justice to develop a curriculum. The Committee conceived a broad-based liberal arts curriculum that included studies in racial and cultural minorities, the sociology of the city, and social problems. Courses in the psychology of adjustment, political science, and applied sociology or physiology statistics were also required. In September 1967, the second stage of the grant helped increase academic personnel, expand the program, develop extramural programs, expand library resources, and disseminate information to prospective students. In 1971, with the support of the Administration of Criminal Justice Advisory Committee on Curriculum, the Criminal Justice program was awarded departmental status by the University of Illinois Board of Trustees.

In the 1960s, Klassen held several offices, including president, in the Illinois Sociological Society. He was also a Fellow of the American Sociological Association. During his career, Klassen wrote over 50 monographs, published numerous articles, and was a frequent presenter at scholarly conferences. Klassen retired from active teaching in 1973, although he continued to lecture in the University of Illinois at Chicago University Honors Program as a professor emeritus. He died in 1977 at the age of 72.
Scope and Content Note:
The Peter P. Klassen Papers contain material from several of Klassen’s major professional areas of interest. The collection is organized into four series: Sociology, Demography and Campus Planning, Development of the Criminal Justice Department, and Other Professional Activities. Material within each series is arranged chronologically and spans the period from 1949-1974.

The Sociology Series contains materials related to Klassen professional role as a sociologist. It includes several syllabi from undergraduate division classes in sociology at the University of Illinois Navy Pier campus. The series also contains copies of the records of the Illinois Sociological Association from 1956-1968 and material from a 1970 Illinois Sociological Association meeting.

The Demography and Campus Planning Series relates to Klassen’s demographic studies and the establishment of the Chicago Circle campus of the University of Illinois. Materials include newspaper clippings, an undated demographic study by Klassen, correspondence and papers from the Office of Demographic Studies, and a study analyzing student response to the new campus prepared by Louis A. Berman.

The Development of the Criminal Justice Department Series contains materials relating to the establishment of a Criminal Justice Program at the University of Illinois Chicago Circle. It primarily includes materials from the Academic Advisory Committee to the Administration of Criminal Justice Curriculum, which Klassen chaired. The materials include correspondence, proposals, reports, and curriculum materials and are useful in tracing the development of the program from a sub-area within the Department of Sociology and Anthropology through the campaign for independent departmental status.

The Other Professional Activities Series contains program material for a 1962 University of Illinois Conference, and correspondence relating to the American Association of University Professors.
